Editorial

Dear Colleagues,

As a member of the Editorial Board, with the second issue of the journal in 2018, and its 7 original articles, 4 case reports, and 1 image of interest, we say "Hello" to you.

In this issue, we have studies concerning sections of emergency medicine, including emergency radiology, intubation technique, ischemic stroke, gastroenterology, education methods, and two other studies related to intravenous fluid administration. I express my gratitude to the authors who sent their precious manuscript to us. I also would like to specially thank our peer reviewers who spent their valuable time in evaluating and contributing to our journal manuscripts.

I want to give some important information to all our authors. Even after excluding studies published in our journal until this issue, we still have a several studies pending for publication in our journal spanning a period of three years. When we examine the submitted studies in our online submission system, retrospective studies and demographic survey studies are more commonly involved. After analyzing this report, as a member of the editorial board, I would like to point out that we have decided that our journal will mostly include prospective studies. This means that the acceptance rate of retrospective studies and demographic survey studies will be limited. Unfortunately, limited space permits us to publish only a small fraction of all the original articles submitted each year. Thus, I apologize to all the authors whose manuscripts have been rejected.

Thus, it is sure that submission of manuscripts is a vital support to our journal. We wish to receive your continuing support and contributions.

Sincerely,

On behalf of the Editorial Board
Editor in Chief
